FOR RELEASE IN SUNDAY PAPERS, MAY 26, 1946

J O I N T A R M Y--N A V Y R E L E A S E

Intensive searches for Army and Navy personnel who became missing or missing in action are continuing throughout the world, However, reports of search activity to date indicate there remains little or no possibility of finding any of such personnel alive, except a few who have been missing less than sixty days or a few who are believed to be deliberately absenting themselves without authority, the War and Navy Departments have announced.

It is the opinion of all overseas commanders who are charged with searching for information of the fate of missing persons that, with the above exceptions, all living Army and Navy personnel have been recovered. This opinion is based on knowledge acquired before and since the cessation of hostilities and on experience gained during the extensive searches which have been made throughout all areas concerned.

All overseas commanders were recently queried as to the probability of personnel now carried in the missing status being located alive. The answers from all commanders revealed that no information has been brought to light by intensive investigations which would indicate the possibility that any will be found alive.

Virtually all persons who are now officially recorded as missing or missing in action will continue to be so recorded until twelve months have expired from the date of inception of the missing status, or until conclusive evidence of death or of some other status is received, as required by a Federal statute.

The cases of all personnel who have been missing more than a year, and who have not yet been officially presumed dead under the provisions of Public Law 490, 77th Congress, as amended, are under review in the War Department and it is anticipated that all action to make presumptive death findings in these cases will be completed shortly. All naval personnel who have been missing more than one year have already been presumed dead.

Under the provisions of Public Law 490, 77th Congress, as amended, after an individual has been in a missing status for twelve months and no conclusive evidence has been obtained, all available reports and data concerning the individual's disappearance are carefully reviewed and a determination of status is made. Following the review, the War and Navy Departments are authorized to make a presumptive finding of death or to continue the person in a missing status, as the circumstances warrant. The next of kin in each instance is notified of the change in status. The termination of a person's absence by a presumptive finding of death is not to be construed as an indication that the search for the missing individual has been concluded. It is merely an administrative procedure which terminates the pay and allowances for persons listed in the "missing" status.

A great volume of pertinent information on "missing" personnel was obtained from Americans liberated from German prison camps around V-E Day and from Japanese prison camps shortly after V-J Day. The liberated personnel were interrogated soon after their release and in many cases furnished bits of information which when pieced together enabled Army and Navy officials to clear up the records of many persons who had been carried in the "missing" status.

MORE

Numerous German documents, files, and records were captured by American troops prior to and immediately following the surrender of the German Forces. These records have been translated and contain in many instances, complete files on persons who have been carried on the "missing" status. References to the date, place of burial and cause of death have been found in the files of many American soldiers. In many cases during hostilities, the Germans notified the International Red Cross of deaths within their areas, however frequently these reports were sketchy.

The War Department, since acquisition of the German files, has been able to clear up thousands of cases wherein a person was classified as "missing". From one volume of captured records, more than 1700 positive identifications of personnel previously listed as missing or presumed dead, have been made. These captured records are still being carefully studied and each case listed therein thoroughly investigated.

The "Dulag Luft" or German Air Interrogation Center Records have been completely translated and it is expected that by the end of July 1946, all next of kin of casualties mentioned in this set of records will have been notified of any additional information contained in these records. The "Dulag Luft" records pertain to air casualties.

Original information on combat casualties was obtained from the comrades of those who became casualties, both in ground and air battles. Although the location of casualties from ground action is known to be within a certain area, the heat of battle and pressing tasks which rested upon the troops sometimes made it difficult to obtain complete information.

Air battles were fought over enemy territory, the land and sea areas adjacent to enemy territory and along the route flown between enemy territory and our friendly bases. Air casualties occurred over this very large area. These battles were often fought five miles above the ground and aircraft may travel for miles after being damaged before striking the ground or water. Practically all air casualty information is originally based upon statements of personnel who returned to our bases or carriers safely, or where the planes failed to return from individual missions.

All original and subsequent Army casualty reports are forwarded to a central casualty record office known as the Casualty Branch, Adjutant General's Office. These offices exist in every theater of operations with a central office of records in Washington, D. C. In case of the Navy, all original and subsequent casualty reports are forwarded by the Commanding Officers directly to the Bureau of Naval Personnel, Washington, D. C.

The work of searching for, identifying and caring for the remains of casualties is a responsibility of theater commanders in each theater of operations. Under the comprehensive search plan now in operation, extensive investigations and searches are being conducted in all areas that may be productive of recovery of persons or of casualty information.

Coordination essential to the plan has been effected with military government officials and officials of allied and other governments. In the European Theater, for example, permission has been granted the United States Forces to continue necessary "sweeping operations" for United States deceased in Great Britain, within the British Occupation Zone in Germany, within the entire French Zone in Germany and Austria, and in France. These "sweeping operations" include location, exhumation, identification and evacuation of all deceased United States military personnel interred in isolated graves. The Russian Government has agreed to report to United States Military Forces their findings of all isolated graves of American personnel found within the Soviet Occupied Zones.

Under search operations, as identifications are made of heretofore unidentified bodies or as other evidence deemed conclusive of death is revealed, official reports of death are issued in the cases of those previously considered missing or presumed dead. In a number of these cases, particularly those involving surface craft and aircraft lost at sea, it is doubtful that any further information will be uncovered. The overseas authorities are treating each case where the status is unknown as an open case and a problem to be solved.

Certain areas within the European and Mediterranean Theaters are still heavily mined with German land and anti-personnel mines. The searching operations in these areas will be delayed until all mines are deactivated.

There are three principal types of search teams which are carrying on the comprehensive search plans now in operation in the various theater of operations. These are:

(1) Graves Registration Command teams composed of from three to ten officers and enlisted men specially trained in search, disinterment, identification and reburial.

(2) Air force teams which consist of three or more officers and enlisted men who have available information of the special nature required in air casualty cases.

(3) Air Search-Air Jungle teams which include both search and rescue teams consisting of three or more officers and enlisted men. Airplanes, helicopters, and gliders are used in search and rescue operations in inaccessible areas. This type of team is used primarily immediately after an aircraft has crashed or has been reported missing.

In addition to personnel permanently assigned to the search teams within the Graves Registration Commands and the Air Forces, the Theater Commanders have been instructed by the War Department to make all troops available for these operations and to use as many troops as necessary for a complete search of all areas that may be productive of recovery of persons or of casualty information.

Each of these three types of teams operate in close cooperation with each other and with the Casualty Clearance Section of the Adjutant General's Office, which maintains all the records.

The following is the general procedure used throughout the world in most cases by the Graves Registration Command and Air Force search teams:

A team is assigned to a specific area and all known records concerning the area to be searched are given to the team by special offices set up to prepare this data. Every effort is made by these special offices to secure all available data.

When it is probable that aircraft casualties may have occurred in the area, special "missing air crew reports" are supplied to the team. These reports include: a description of conditions under which the aircraft crashed as described by the last person to have seen the airplane; weather conditions; the mission of the plane; the organization to which assigned; serial numbers of the plane, engines, guns, and other equipment; and a list of all crew members giving name and serial number.

As the team members collect all the information available, officials of the cities and areas to be searched are notified that the search team will soon arrive in their locale. The officials are requested to collect all pertinent information which may be of use to the team and to make arrangements for the team members to question all persons possessing any information which may be of value in the search. Placards printed in the native language of the area are also sent to the officials to be posted in conspicuous places announcing the arrival of the team and requesting cooperation of the populace.

The teams, with all available reports, arrive at a village and through interpreters, which accompany the teams throughout the searches, interview all persons who have any information upon which the searches may be conducted. Clergymen are normally contacted immediately as they frequently either assisted in burial of casualties or know of citizens who did participate.

MORE

The underground organizations were often able to maintain records of burials of allied troops. These records are also turned over to the search teams, and in many cases, the persons who actually conducted the burials will lead the teams to the actual grave sites. The teams contact every individual known or believed to have been in a position to have information regarding missing personnel.

Once a grave is located, the team members check to see if it is marked with any identification. If the graves bear no markings, the members of the team will disinter the body and make every effort to identify it.

Identification tags, jewelry, fingerprints, dental charts, anthropology, serial numbers of wrist watches, and any equipment found either in the grave or in the vicinity, and the combat records of persons in vehicles or aircraft are all employed in the extensive identification investigations.

After identification is made, or all facts which may lead to identification are recorded, the team members will effect reburial. The grave is properly marked and a record of its exact location is made.

Many identifications are later made after extensive investigations based upon a single clue. One example concerns the identification of a casualty based upon a ring bearing initials and the insignia of some organization. Long investigation revealed that the insignia was the seal of a normal school in the United States, but that its student body was exclusively female. The school roster and a list of graduates were checked. After a great deal of correspondence, the owner of the ring was found. She disclosed that her husband had been wearing the ring, thus after many months, positive identification had been made.

Another particularly interesting identification based solely upon a ring follows: A Marine Captain, who had been a prisoner of war of the Japanese, came into a War Department office with a ring. The ring showed a picture of a building with a pine tree in front of it, three initials, and bore the date, "1937". On his release from the prison camp at the end of the war, the Marine Captain had received the ring from a Chinese cook at the camp. The Chinese cook told the Captain that one of the prisoners, an American flier, whose name he could not remember due to his unfamiliarity with English, had given him the ring just before he was taken out to be executed and asked him to get it back to the United States. Beyond that there was nothing.

The War Department sent the ring to a metallurgical laboratory for analysis, which disclosed that there were three jewelry manufacturers which used that particular alloy. Greatly enlarged photographs were made of the ring and sent to these three manufacturers. One of the firms replied with a small lead slug, evidently stamped from the same die from which the ring was made, and which also disclosed that it was a graduation ring of a certain high school. A check of the high school in question was made and, from the initials in the ring, the identity of the soldier was established from a list of the graduates in 1937.

However, identification of the individual was only a part of the task. It was still necessary to locate the grave. The Chinese cook was located. He had not witnessed the execution, but he knew a Korean who had. The Korean was finally found and he had also witnessed the burial and led searchers to an isolated grave upon which there were no marks of identification. A dental chart taken from the remains, checked with the records at the time of induction proved beyond a doubt that it was the body of the missing flier.

War and Navy Department officials stress that the searches will be conducted as long as there remains an area which might be productive of any information about American war casualties. Instructions have been given to all personnel involved in the search activities in any manner to be thorough and exact so that positive identification may be made in as many instances as possible.

Following is a breakdown by war theaters of the areas already searched and to be searched and results to date of the searching operations:

AFRICA-MIDDLE EAST THEATER: Territory searched includes Casablanca, Algiers, Oran, Tripoli, Tunis, Benghasi, Heliopolis (Egypt), Khartoum (Sudan), Gura (Eritrea), Aden (Arabia) and the islands off the coast of Tunisia. French police and gendarmerie and British Controlled Area police cooperated. Only two United States Army deserters were apprehended. No new activities are planned unless new information warrants individual investigations.

ALASKA: Areas where personnel disappeared were searched. There were no bodies recovered. The majority of missing personnel were airmen forced down at sea. All areas not yet searched will be covered as soon as spring thaws allow.

CARIBBEAN: Search teams have located and inspected wreckage when records indicated that previous searches of jungle areas were incomplete. No results were reported. Search for missing persons continues.

CHINA: Search detachments are based at Nanking, Formosa, Peiping, Tsinan, Hankow, Canton, Chungking, Hanio, Kaifong, Changsha and Foochow. Territory searched includes areas around Nanking, Kinhua (Chekiang province); Kuantion (Anhwei province); Suhsion (Hanhsuchow province); Wuhu; Hsuchow; Changte (Anyang province); Chengtu (Szechuan province); Kaifong, Hongkong; Kowloon; Swatow; the territory bordering the Haiphong-Saigon (Indo-China) railway right-of-way as far as Hue, and a large part of the island of Formosa. No missing personnel have been located alive and no information received indicating the possibility that any will be found alive. Cases resolved and recommendations made for final disposition number 190. Searches will continue as long as armed forces of the United States remain in China.

ICELAND AND NEWFOUNDLAND: Areas were searched at the time that personnel disappeared. Results were satisfactory; no additional searches necessary. No future activities planned unless other incidents of missing personnel occur.

GREENLAND: Areas were searched immediately after personnel disappeared. Recovery of remains has at times been impossible or very difficult. No future activities planned.

EUROPE: Air Force search teams and detachment of Graves Registration Service are coordinating activities. Search areas include Gibraltar, Portugal, Spain, France, Switzerland, Belgium, Luxembourg, Holland, United Kingdom (including Channel Islands), Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Austria, Hungary and the Balkans. Cases cleared number 6,552.

INDIA-BURMA AND SOUTHEAST ASIA: Air Jungle Rescue Coordinating Center at Rangoon in charge of the search. Areas searched include Kallang-Butterworth Area, Pegu, Margui, Phuket Island, Mingaladon-Akyab air route, Bangkok-Singapore route and Wan (Burma). Ground Searcher Party teams have covered Perak State, Banka Island, Djambi River and Indragiri River areas in Sumatra, Salween as far north as Shwegun in Rangoon and Moulmean areas; areas in Siam from Raheng through Lanhoi, Sukothai, Pitsanuloke and Bantakli; Lampong, the Chiengmai area, the Burma-Siam railroad from Aparon to Bangkok, waterways of the delta from Bubharn to Bangkok; Ayuthia and the area of the promontory of Rayoung; the Korat area; region around Bangkok bounded by Kanchanburi in the northwest, Saraburi in the north, Prachinburi in the east and Pechaburi in the south, and the Prachuab Kirikan-Moguri road in Burma. Completed searches will include Siam, Burma, Andaman and Nicobar Islands, Malaya, Netherlands East Indies, Hainan and French Indo-China south of the 16th parallel north of the equator. Approximately 750 missing US military personnel, Indians, British and Australian POWs and twelve civilians have been accounted for by search teams. Search activities by units other than Graves Registration Service have been virtually completed.

MEDITERRANEAN: Search area includes Italy, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, and islands of Corsica, Sardina and Sicily. Previously unresolved cases now cleared number 2,693. Search operations are continuing.

SOUTH ATLANTIC: Searches were made at the time of aircraft crashes or disappearances. No results have been reported and no future activities are planned except in the event of additional accidents.

MORE

PACIFIC: Search area includes: Japan, Borneo, Celebes, Moluccas, Ryukyu, Izu Schichito, Bonin, Kazan, Philippines, Marianas, Nomoi, Hall, Truk, Samoa, Marshall-Gilberts, Carolines, Sorosal, Volcanic, Ellice, Fiji and Sulu Island groups; Espiritu Santu and Guadalcanal Island command areas; New Caledonia and all islands under the jurisdiction of the Commanding Generals of Middle Pacific and Western Pacific. No living persons have been recovered since the liberation of prisoners of war and the location of Americans operating as guerrillas. The clearing of unresolved cases through identification of unknown dead will continue.

ARMY BATTLE DEATHS REACH 229,238;
UNRECOVERED PRISONERS, MISSING TOTAL 10,897

Casualty lists for World War II released today by the War Department set the number of Army battle deaths at 229,238 for all theaters, and the total number of battle casualties of all types, including wounded, injured, captured and missing, at 948,418.

The figures cover the period from December 7, 1941, through February 28, 1946.

The difference of 719,180 between the total casualties and the total deaths represents 691,700 returned to duty, 16,273 currently carried as wounded, 3,083 former prisoners of war not yet accounted for, 7,814 missing in action still subject to search, and 310 who died while in captivity and were already counted in the total deaths figure. The figures do not include such non-battle casualties as illness not the result of action, training accidents, domestic plane crashes, and traffic deaths and injuries traceable to civil life.

The War Department cautioned against considering the total casualty figure of 948,418 as representing that many individuals. Many persons were injured or wounded twice, and other individuals fell into two or more casualty categories; for example, a man wounded and then captured is counted as two casualties. Figures on the number of separate persons who became casualties were not available.

The European Theater, with the greatest manpower, suffered the highest number of casualties in all brackets. Of the 592,074 total battle casualties recorded in the ETO, 106,261 were killed in action; 386,075 were wounded in action, of whom 16,240 later died; 76,671 were captured and 778 of this group died, and 23,067 became missing of whom 8,798 later died or were declared dead. The Mediterranean Theater, with 178,602 total casualties and 43,200 deaths, was second in total casualties followed in order by the Pacific Theater commands, the China-Burma-India Theater, Africa-Middle East, United States Army Strategic Air Forces (the B-29 command in the CBI and Pacific areas), Alaskan Department and the Caribbean and South Atlantic areas. A total of 835 battle casualties, including 548 deaths, were listed as "en route and not chargeable to any command."

The total number of persons killed in action reached 173,441. The other 55,797 included in the battle-deaths total of 229,238 were broken down as follows: 26,908 died of wounds or injuries suffered in action; 9,617 died while captured as prisoners of war or as internees of neutral countries; and 19,272 on whom an administrative finding of death was made under Public Law 490, 77th Congress, while in a missing status, or were reported dead.

Personnel captured in all theaters totaled 124,927, of whom 111,917 were later returned to military control. Deaths in captivity numbered 9,617, leaving 3,393 listed in the report as still "captured." Of these 3,393, a total of 3,083 were still missing on February 28, and 310 died of wounds but are already included as deaths in the 26,908 figure above.

Missing persons totaled 51,115, but the end of the war has solved many of these cases. A total of 24,029 persons missing in action were returned to duty, and 19,272 were determined to have died. The dwindling list of persons still carried as missing now numbers 7,814, which, with the 3,083 unrecovered from captivity, totals 10,897.

Of the total casualties of 948,418, officers suffered 98,066 and enlisted personnel suffered 850,352. These were in the same approximatelratio as officer and enlisted strength on V-E Day, when Army strength was at its highest.
